

Consider engineers and architects to design environmentally sustainable, context-sensitive transportation systems

For the past five years, WSDOT has been integrating the principles of context sensitive design into the project development process. SSB 5412 reinforces the importance of this message by requiring WSDOT engineers and architects to consider environmentally sustainable, context-sensitive design elements for the state transportation system.

See more of what WSDOT is doing at WSDOT's website
<http://www.wsdot.wa.gov/eesc/design/Urban/Default.htm>