Sustainable Stormwater Solutions
Stormwater Swales and Planters
Sustainable stormwater management integrates stormwater into building and site development. Redirecting runoff from sewers to more natural systems allows water to soak into the ground and filters pollutants before storm water flows into rivers and streams. New Seasons Market, the Hosford-Abernethy Neighborhood Association and Environmental Services worked together to develop innovative, sustainable stormwater solutions at New Seasons Market.

Wetlands at Work
What's going on in this parking lot?
When it rains, water runs across pavement and picks up pollutants that drip from vehicles. This polluted water, called stormwater, drains into storm sewers and into our rivers and streams.
Cleaning water naturally.
OMSI's parking lot is contoured so the runoff goes into the planted areas called bioswales. As the water soaks into the ground, many pollutants are left behind. This cleaner water then flows into the Willamette River.

Getting down to business.
This is just one example of a constructed wetland. In Portland, businesses and industries are finding working wetlands to be cost effective and environmentally friendly. Contact the Environmental Services, City of Portland to find out how you can make wetlands work for you.
